MY THOUGHTS ABOUT…

My thoughts on married life:

1) Is it necessary for everyone to have a companion in order to live their lives?

2) Is love marriage a sin?

3) Can we live alone indefinitely?

4) How do we know he/she is the one?

5) Is marriage for ourselves or for societal adaptation?

6) What is the ideal marriage life?

7) Is divorce a sin?

Do we truly require a companion?: We obviously require someone to share ourselves with, both physically and mentally.
As we know, God created man first, then all the animals, birds, and other creatures with their partners. The question of why God did not create Adam and Eve at the same time has been raised. Why was there a time gap between Adam and Eve?
If I'm not mistaken, God may believe that Adam is sufficient to take over that position, but by seeing Adam alone physically and mentally, God may believe that Eve should be created and should be a part of Adam. So, why didn't Jesus have a companion? God's children are referred to in the Bible as Jesus' bride (it has the better and large topic). Simply, we want to know that God's desire for us to be combined with a companion was the primary reason for the creation of Adam and Eve.

Is love marriage a sin? There is a significant difference between love and lust, but we are all confused about it. Both, in my opinion, play an important role in the life of a marriage. Whether we Christians like it or not, everyone in this world has lust in their eyes at some point in their lives. Lust is a transgression. However, one should be aware of which rules in a relationship are motivated by love or lust. When love triumphs over lust, it may result in a perfect relationship, but when lust triumphs over love, it will almost certainly result in disaster in life. Love and lust for a partner are not sins. Even lust is a component of love, and every love contains a component of lust.

Can we live our entire lives alone? Yes, that is a possibility. However, only a selected few are capable of doing so wholeheartedly. You should give yourself more than you deserve. Submission to God was one of the most notable concepts missing from the marital relationship. But they might need someone somewhere, not as a partner, but as the form of any relationship. Only the most advanced levels of thought and lifestyle are free of the concept of relationships. Agories, saints, and so on. It is not possible to be mentally corrupted and physically devoted at the same time. Finally, most people rely on others, either directly or indirectly, and they may lose sight of others, love, and relationships at some point.

How can we be sure he/she is the one? Many people believe that a detailed explanation of love, relationships, and marriage life is anything but. It could be because of psychological factors, character, a bond, a myth, or something else. But, in my opinion, each relationship should have its own path to keep it safe. When two people have made a commitment to each other, they should not focus on them. Relationships should not be compelled by our circumstances. It should be our inner soul that guards it. When we can't, we should be open about our split.

Instead of cheating on our loved one, there is nothing wrong with that. Because we can't force someone to love all of the time, the other person should respect the decision. However, both parties must comprehend what they truly desire, whether complete separation or temporary space Both have significant differences. This temporary separation may aid in determining what the people truly desire. The presence or absence of the partners has no effect on them during that temporary separation. They cannot fall in love with the same person again. When their separation has a significant impact on them, they cannot be separated. Everything is dependent on their mental state, which everyone should respect.

Is marriage about us or about society? We live in a society, and I accept that we can connect mentally and physically with one another, and that we can rely on one another; there is nothing wrong with that. At the same time, only we know what we are going through in our lives. In this case, being with an abusive partner is completely stupid. We can't always explain what we're feeling.

Most marriages in India are solely influenced by society, particularly family and relatives. Fear of what they will say leads us to abusive partners. At the same time, we should understand the true meaning of abuse. We simply cannot dismiss someone from our lives in that manner because we have spent our time, our age, our beliefs, our energy, and we have shared ourselves with them, one should be clear with their decision and should not regret it in the future.

What would be the ideal marriage life? Living forever or for a while, I believe that the relationship should be respected more than the person. Every relationship is distinct in its own way. In every relationship, ideas, thoughts, and everything else differs. Simply put, we should remain committed to the relationship until we are ready to call it quits. Having affairs and being in an illegitimate relationship is completely corrupt. Instead, one could argue that leaving the relationship is preferable to cheating on it. People may believe they have multiple people's feelings.

But, in my opinion, with only one person can have all of the emotional attachments! should realise the significance of it in a relationship. Being with a partner and later meeting someone who truly cares for you may lead to give in to them. It may not be entirely incorrect, but they should have the courage to express their true feelings. That is the issue here. Their choice could be incorrect. They may believe that continuing to live with the first partner is the best option. This is not a bad idea, but it is also contingent on the two partners involved. In this society, anything can be said. However, only those three should make the decision, with no involvement from others.

Is divorce a sin? According to the Old Testament Bible, divorce is not a big deal. But, according to Jesus said Moses did it to avoid the consequences of the Jewish people. The Bible also states that one can divorce their partner if they commit adultery. What does adultery mean in this context? Because the Bible says that even seeing someone with lust is equivalent to having intimacy with them through eyes! Alternatively, the person who has physically intimated with another may commit adultery and be divorced. This is the obvious explanation. Eye intimacy is associated with self-discipline, whereas physical intimacy is associated with a complete commandment that should not be performed.

Now the question is, if this relationship has a lot of problems, right? Domestic violence, physical abuse, neglect, and making a partner mentally ill, in addition to adultery, can all lead to divorce. Because love can encompass anything, it is necessary to decide whether the relationship is worth tolerating this everything or not is that person worth to have you in their life or nor. Aside from that, this relationship should bring us joy and happiness in general. When it comes to toxic however, and their presence or absence no longer affects you, separation is perfectly acceptable. But never lose sight of your true love in life.

Finally, it is you and the person on whom you are entirely dependent, and you are entirely dependent on them. Whether they are with them or apart from them. Be happy in your relationship, unconditionally love your partner, and be genuine in your relationship. I've always believed that male dominance over females isn't necessarily a bad thing in relationships. At the same time, males must allow females complete freedom under their dominance. It might be a little difficult to grasp. But trying forces us to comprehend. It's a biological fact that men want to control their female partners. Nothing is wrong with that. Women can be brought under your control with your love, care, and priorities.When a woman makes a mistake, be supportive rather than criticising what she has done.
